“Bull Chair” pp 518 Hans J. Wegner 1961.

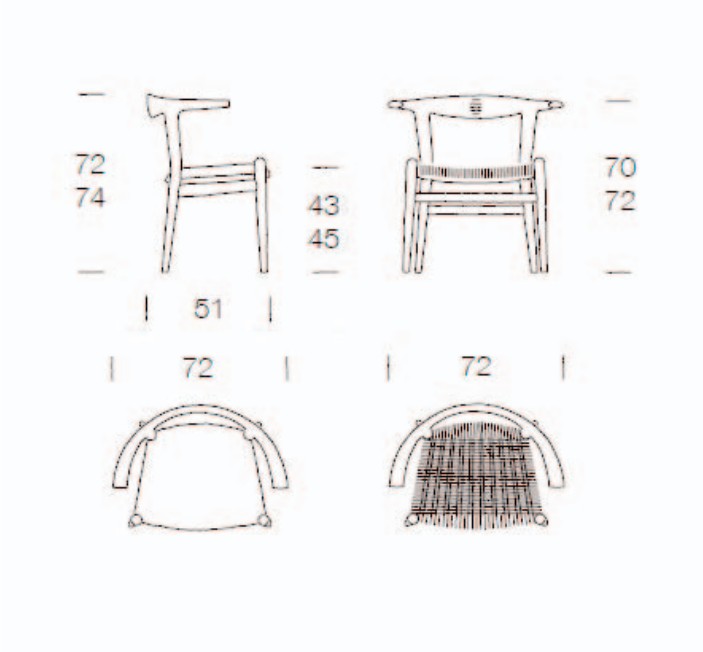

With this design Wegner spared nothing is spared because he wanted to make an organically shaped chair that puts the human individual first.

Your arms and back are supported by two huge pieces of solid wood joined in the middle by six rosewood tenons.

A work of art that will challenge any craftsman, apparently with the sole purpose of providing a sublime sitting experience. Everything else seems less important, but as usual Wegner has managed to turn this vigorous expression into a balanced unit with its very own characteristics.

“The goal is to express something in wood - to discover what is right, carpentry wise”

Hans J. Wegner.
